TasksetV5: Human Rating Booklet (blinded)

25 scene pairs · English

Rater ID: _____ Date: _____

How to rate

1. Each pair shows two versions of the same scene, Version A and Version B. You are not told which one is the original, and the order is random.

2. Read both versions completely before rating.

3. On the answer sheet, for each pair: (a) rate the five features for Version A and for Version B from 0.0 (none) to 1.0 (maximum), in steps of 0.1; (b) say whether the characters, setting and events are the same in both versions (Same / Partly / Different); (c) rate the coherence and the acceptability of each version from 1 to 5.

4. Rate each version on its own. Work alone and do not use AI tools.

The five features

Pacing: Narrative speed, event progression, momentum.

Dialogue Density: Proportion and importance of spoken dialogue.

Action Density: Physical action, external events, movement, confrontation, or concrete incident density.

Character Interaction: Density and centrality of character-to-character exchange, conflict, cooperation, or relational movement.

Emotion Intensity: Affective intensity, tension, distress, intimacy, anger, fear, joy, or dramatic emotional charge.

Same / Partly / Different

Characters: Same: same characters and roles · Partly: a minor character added, removed or changed · Different: a main character added, removed or replaced.

Setting: Same: same place and time · Partly: details changed, same place and time · Different: a different place or time.

Events: Same: same main events and the same ending · Partly: a smaller event changed, same ending · Different: a main event or the ending changed.

Quality, 1 to 5

Coherence: 1 = contradictory or confusing · 3 = a noticeable gap or inconsistency · 5 = logical and consistent throughout the scene.

Acceptability: 1 = not usable in a screenplay · 3 = usable only with substantial edits · 5 = usable as it is.

Pair 01/25 · HE-e303ecb81cfd

Ghostbusters II · scene position 7

Version A

35 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Venkman and Spengler begin pulling in the cable. A Con Ed Supervisor's car arrives, followed by the police car. The burly SUPERVISOR approaches, followed by the two cops.
SUPERVISOR
(briefly)
What's going on here?
Venkman and Spengler pause. Venkman gestures dismissively, adjusting a Nynex hardhat.
VENKMAN
(shrugs)
Busy night.
The Supervisor stares, unimpressed. He points to the curb.
Venkman nudges Spengler.
Stantz's voice crackles over Venkman’s walkie-talkie.
STANTZ (O.S.)
(urgent)
Help! Something's pulling me! It's… it's eating my boots!
Venkman quickly turns off the walkie-talkie. The FIRST COP eyes Venkman.
FIRST COP
You're not with Con Ed or the phone company.
Venkman looks at the Cop, then glances at the hole.

Version B

35 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Venkman and Spengler start hauling in the cable as a Con Ed Supervisor's car drives up, and behind it, the same police car they saw earlier. A burly SUPERVISOR gets out and crosses toward them, followed by the two cops.
SUPERVISOR
(no nonsense)
Okay, what's the story here?
Venkman and Spengler stop pulling up the cable and Venkman tries the belligerent worker ploy again, only this time he's wearing a Nynex hardhat.
VENKMAN
What, I got time for this? We got three thousand phones out in the Village and about eight million miles of cable to check.
SUPERVISOR
(not buying it)
The phone lines are over there.
(points to the curb)
Venkman pops Spengler on the head.
VENKMAN
I told ya!
Stantz can be heard ranting over Venkman's walkie-talkie.
STANTZ (O.S.)
(filtered)
Help! Help! Pull me up! It's alive! It's eating my boots.
Venkman switches off the walkie-talkie.
FIRST COP
You ain't with Con Ed or the phone company.
We checked. Tell me another one.
Venkman stares at the Cop for a long moment.
VENKMAN
Gas leak?

→ Answer sheet: Pair 01

Pair 02/25 · HE-cb4843e61769

Ghostbusters II · scene position 9

Version A

37 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - BOTTOM OF THE SHAFT

The conduit falls on a heavy electrical transmission line, ripping through the cable with a SHOWER OF SPARKS.

Version B

37 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - BOTTOM OF THE SHAFT

The conduit slams into a thick electrical transmission line, sending a blinding shower of sparks.
RAYNER: (Coughing) What was that?!
VENKMAN: Looks like we just short-circuited the whole city!
STERN: (Grimacing) Great. Just great. Now what?
RAYNER: We need to get out of here! This place is unstable.
VENKMAN: Easy for you to say, Mr. Safety Inspector.
STERN: Someone has to worry about the consequences!
RAYNER: (Pointing) Look! The cable’s severed. We’re cut off.
VENKMAN: Well, that’s just fantastic. Anyone got a rope?
STERN: (Sarcastically) Oh, yes, I always carry a rope when investigating paranormal activity in abandoned subway stations.
RAYNER: Just… let’s figure something out. Quickly.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 02

Pair 03/25 · HE-41d39a1b0d34

Ghostbusters II · scene position 1

Version A

29 INT. HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Stantz rappels off the sides of the airshaft as he continues his descent in total darkness.
STANTZ
(using a radio now)
Lower -- lower -(to himself)
Gee, this really is deep.
Suddenly, his feet kick thin air as he gets to the bottom of the airshaft and swings free in some kind of tunnel.
STANTZ
(shouts)
Hold it! Steady!
He pulls a powerful flashlight from his utility belt and shines it into the tunnel below.

Version B

29 INT. HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Stantz rappels off the sides of the airshaft as he continues his descent in total darkness.
STANTZ
(using a radio now)
Lower -- lower -(to himself)
Wow, this is deeper than I thought.
Suddenly, his feet kick thin air as he gets to the bottom of the airshaft and swings free in some kind of tunnel.
STANTZ
(shouts)
Hold it! Steady!
He pulls a powerful flashlight from his utility belt and shines it into the tunnel below.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 03

Pair 04/25 · HE-f3e48b301237

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 6

Version A

65 EXT. MOVING GIG - NIGHT

The car lurches forward, tires spitting gravel as it accelerates onto the winding country road. Holmes leans forward, peering at the driver, a burly man with a perpetually sour expression. He taps the map impatiently.

"Are you certain this is the correct route?" Holmes asks, his voice sharp.

The driver grunts, barely glancing at him. He wrestles with the steering wheel as the car swerves around a sharp bend. Rain lashes against the windshield, blurring the already indistinct landscape.

Suddenly, a figure darts across the road, forcing the driver to slam on the brakes. The car skids, narrowly avoiding a collision. Holmes grabs the dashboard to steady himself.

"What was that?" Watson exclaims, peering out the window.

Holmes scans the roadside, his eyes narrowed. "Someone… or something. It moved with unnatural speed."

The driver curses under his breath, restarting the engine. The car pulls back onto the road, continuing its journey at a more cautious pace. Holmes remains tense, his gaze fixed on the passing shadows.

Version B

65 EXT. MOVING GIG - NIGHT

As they drive along, Holmes glances at the guide, who is grim and uncommunicative.

DISSOLVE TO:

→ Answer sheet: Pair 04

Pair 05/25 · HE-9b53a614098d

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 7

Version A

66 EXT. ROAD LEADING TO CASTLE - NIGHT

The gig, pulled by a spirited grey mare, lurches along the winding road, its two passengers, Holmes and Watson, jostled by the uneven terrain. Rain slicks the cobblestones, reflecting the faint moonlight. The driver, a burly man with a weathered face, strains to control the horse as it picks up speed, eager to reach the castle gates. Holmes leans forward, peering through the downpour, his silhouette sharp against the looming silhouette of Urquhart Castle. Watson clutches his hat, battling the wind and rain, while simultaneously attempting to jot down observations in his notebook. A sudden jolt throws him forward as the horse hits a particularly deep rut. Holmes, with a swift movement, steadies Watson, his eyes fixed on the castle ahead. The horse’s hooves clatter against the stone, echoing in the night as they approach the imposing entrance.

Version B

66 EXT. ROAD LEADING TO CASTLE - NIGHT

The gig, with its two passengers, proceeds along the lakeshore, approaching the entrance to Urquhart.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 05

Pair 06/25 · HE-02976e0045d3

Ghostbusters II · scene position 4

Version A

32 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Stantz shines his flashlight on the meter and whistles at the extremely high reading.
STANTZ
(on the radio)
Off the top of the scale. This place is really hot. Lower me to the floor.
As Venkman and Spengler feed him some more cable, he pans his flashlight down the wall of the station, then onto the floor.
STANTZ
(shouts)
Hold it!! Stop!! Whoa!!

Version B

32 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Stantz shines his flashlight on the meter, a look of disbelief on his face. He whistles sharply.
STANTZ
(on the radio)
Off the top of the scale! This place is really hot. Lower me to the floor.
Venkman and Spengler begin feeding him more cable. As Stantz descends, he pans his flashlight down the wall, then onto the floor.
SPENCER
Careful down there, Stantz. Watch your step.
STANTZ
(shouts, his voice echoing)
Hold it! Stop! Whoa! I see something… a pattern… it’s… it’s ice!
VENKMAN
Ice? Down there?
STANTZ
Yeah! And it’s spreading! Fast!

→ Answer sheet: Pair 06

Pair 07/25 · HE-774e675404e7

Ghostbusters II · scene position 5

Version A

33 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ'S POV - FLOOR - NIGHT

Below him is a river of bubbling seething, glowing slime, a veritable torrent of disgusting ooze.
As he stares into the foul effluent, we become aware of the strangely amplified and magnified sounds of great ENGINES THROBBING and pulsing in the bowels of the city, of WATER RUSHING through pipes, STEAM HISSING through ducts, the muffled RUMBLE of the SUBWAY and the ROAR of TRAFFIC, and mixed with it all, the unmistakable sounds of human conflict and pain -- VOICES SHOUTING in anger, SCREAMING in fear, GROANING in pain, a sad and eerie symphony.

Version B

33 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ'S POV - FLOOR - NIGHT

Below him, the slime churns, a river of bubbling, seething, glowing ooze. Stantz grips his PKE meter, its needle spinning wildly.
STANTZ
(To himself, muttering)
It’s… it’s off the charts.
He glances up at Egon, who’s fiddling with a complex device.
STANTZ
Egon, are you getting anything?
EGON
(Without looking up)
Fluctuations in the ectoplasmic field are… significant. Readings are consistent with a Class Seven manifestation.
STANTZ
Class Seven? That’s… bad.
He looks back at the slime, then back at Egon.
STANTZ
What do we do?
EGON
(Still focused on his device)
We monitor. And try not to touch anything. The viscosity is… concerning.
Suddenly, a voice echoes from the darkness.
VOICE (O.S.)
It’s getting stronger!
Stantz and Egon exchange a worried look. Stantz raises his PKE meter higher.
STANTZ
Something’s down there.
He strains to hear over the amplified sounds of the city – the throbbing engines, rushing water, hissing steam, the muffled rumble of the subway, the roar of traffic – and the unmistakable sounds of human conflict and pain: voices shouting, screaming, groaning, a sad and eerie symphony.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 07

Pair 08/25 · HE-14dd09a43c06

Dog Day Afternoon · scene position 1

Version A

19 EXT. ROCKAWAY BEACH - DAY

There's Heidi. Her body lies exactly as before, baking in the sun. The transistor RADIO plays... she seems to be asleep...
RADIO
...the leader of the pair, a Vietnam veteran, Sonny Abramowicz, has demanded in return for releasing one of the hostages that police allow his wife to visit him at the bank.
Police spokesman...
Heidi sits bolt upright, stares at the radio, which continues to blather on. Abruptly she begins to gather up her things, her children, in a characteristically scatter-brained and hyperactive sort of way. Heidi is a one woman panic: she hustles away across the broiling sand carrying the radio wadded up in towels, and lugging a child, crying helplessly, by one elbow, as though it were a handle, a silhouette against the late afternoon sun, out of Fellini... meanwhile on the SOUND TRACK we are hearing her voice. It is a breathless, harsh childish voice that pours out the words in a torrent:
HEIDI (V.O.)
The transistor goes Sonny what? I couldn't believe my ears, so I shut the transistor, get outta here, who needs this? I say Sonny didn't do it. It's not him to rob a bank. It's not him to hurt anybody, to threaten anybody, to steal or do anything wrong. 'Cause he's never done nothin' wrong from the day I know him.
She is stumping off into the sunset as she says these words and we CUT TO:

Version B

19 EXT. ROCKAWAY BEACH - DAY

There's Heidi. Her body lies exactly as before, baking in the sun. The transistor RADIO plays... she seems to be asleep...
RADIO
...the leader of the pair, a Vietnam veteran, Sonny Abramowicz, has demanded in return for releasing one of the hostages that police allow his wife to visit him at the bank.
Police spokesman...
Heidi sits bolt upright, staring intently at the radio. She glances over at her children, a flicker of worry crossing her face. "Sonny wants his wife to visit?" she murmurs, more to herself than anyone else. She shakes her head, a small, sad smile playing on her lips. Abruptly, she begins to gather up her things, her children, with a renewed sense of urgency.
"Come on, sweethearts," she says, her voice laced with a nervous energy. "Let's get out of this sun."
She hustles away across the broiling sand, carrying the radio wadded up in towels, and gently coaxing a child, crying helplessly, by one elbow. As they walk, she speaks, her voice a breathless, harsh, childish torrent:
HEIDI (V.O.)
The transistor goes Sonny what? I couldn’t believe my ears, so I shut the transistor, get outta here, who needs this? I say Sonny didn’t do it. It’s not him to rob a bank. It’s not him to hurt anybody, to threaten anybody, to steal or do anything wrong. 'Cause he's never done nothin' wrong from the day I know him.

She continues walking, her silhouette a stark contrast against the late afternoon sun, a determined look in her eyes. She pauses, looking back at the beach for a moment, then turns and continues on.
CUT TO:

→ Answer sheet: Pair 08

Pair 09/25 · HE-45a1ac107489

Ghostbusters II · scene position 11

Version A

39 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - STREET - NIGHT

One by one, the streetlights flicker and die, plunging East 77th Street into shadow. The lights in the brownstones lining the street follow suit, then the entire neighborhood succumbs to darkness. A wave of blackness spreads, engulfing the city.
STANTZ (O.S.)
My apologies.

Version B

39 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - STREET - NIGHT

One by one, all the streetlights go out; then the lights on all the buildings along East 77th street; then the whole neighborhood blacks out, and finally the entire city is plunged into darkness.
STANTZ (O.S.)
Sorry.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 09

Pair 10/25 · HE-6afe294dcb70

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 2

Version A

61 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - DAY

Holmes, Gabrielle and Watson approach Urquhart Castle on bicycles, leaning them against a weathered stone wall. A middle-aged man in traditional Scottish attire emerges from a crumbling gatehouse.

GUIDE
Sorry, no visitors permitted today.

HOLMES
Are you the caretaker?

GUIDE
Yes, sir. The castle is undergoing restoration by the Scottish Monuments Preservation Society.

HOLMES
That's a shame. My wife was eager to see it. The tower, in particular, is a fascinating example of late medieval architecture – around 1400, wasn't it?

GUIDE
Indeed, it was.

HOLMES
Let me see… James the Second or James the Third?

GUIDE
James the Third, I believe. If you return next year, the work should be complete, and I'd be happy to offer a tour.

HOLMES
Thank you.

As they turn to leave, a canvas-covered wagon enters through the archway, stopping near the courtyard steps.

WATSON
He seemed a pleasant fellow.

HOLMES
Pleasant enough, but his knowledge is… lacking. A century off, and a different James entirely. (He glances at his guidebook)
It was actually 1500, under James the Fourth.

GABRIELLE
If he’s an official guide, shouldn’t he know?

HOLMES
Perhaps not.

Holmes pauses, listening intently. Gabrielle and Watson look at him curiously.

HOLMES
Do you hear that?

WATSON
(straining)
Just birds, Holmes. A noisy lot.

HOLMES
(scanning the scene)
Not just birds. Our old acquaintances.

From the wagon, two men carefully remove a small birdcage. They hand it to a workman who ascends the steps. Another crate, marked 'SULPHURIC ACID - CORROSIVE', is passed down to two more workmen.

WATSON
Sulphuric acid?

GABRIELLE
The more we discover, the less it makes sense.

HOLMES
To a chemist, it’s quite logical. Sulphuric acid, when combined with saltwater, releases chlorine gas.
(A brief pause)

Holmes observes the scene thoughtfully. The workmen carry the cage and crate towards the tower. A drawbridge lowers, and they cross the moat.

HOLMES
That tower may prove more interesting than initially apparent.

The gatehouse guard appears with two mastiffs on leashes. The dogs growl.

WATSON
Holmes, I suspect our presence is… unnecessary.

Holmes turns, wheels his bicycle, and begins to depart. Gabrielle follows. Watson hurries after them, glancing back at the barking dogs.

Version B

61 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - DAY

Holmes, Gabrielle and Watson are coming up a path from the lakeside, leading their bicycles. They lean the cycles against a ruined wall, start across the courtyard. A middle-aged MAN in kilts emerges from the tumbled-down gatehouse, comes toward them.

GUIDE
Sorry. No visitors allowed.

HOLMES
Are you the guide here?

GUIDE
Yes. The castle is closed to the public while work is going on.

HOLMES
What are they doing?

GUIDE
It's being restored by the Society for the Preservation of Scottish Monuments.

HOLMES
Too bad. I particularly wanted my wife to see Urquhart Castle. The tower is one of the most interesting examples of -about 1400, wasn't it?

GUIDE
That's right.

HOLMES
Let me see -- was it built under James the Second or James the Third?

GUIDE
The Thrid... If you come back next year, we'll be all done here, and I'll be glad to show you around.

HOLMES
Thank you.

.

As the three of them move off, a canvas-topped wagon comes through the stone archway, stops at the front of the steps leading to the inner courtyard.

WATSON
Pleasant sort, isn't he?

HOLMES
Pleasant, but ignorant. He was off one hundred years and one James.
(taps guide-book in his pocket)
It's actually 1500 and James the Fourth.

GABRIELLE
If he's an official guide, shouldn't he know... ?

HOLMES
If he's an official guide.

They have now reached the wall against which they left their bicycles. Suddenly Holmes stops, attracted by the sound of birds chirping.

HOLMES
Listen... Do you hear anything, Watson?

WATSON
(concentrating)
No. Those birds are making too much of a racket.

HOLMES
(looking off)
They're not just birds -- they're our old friends.

Watson and Gabrielle follow his gaze.

From the back of the wagon, the carriers have removed the small bird-cage we saw in the mail-drop on Ashdown Street. They hand it to a workman, who starts up the steps with it. To another couple of workmen they pass down an open-sided crate in which rest two heavy glass bottles protected by wicker. Stencilled on the wooden slate of the crate are the words: SULPHURIC ACID CORROSIVE.

.
Holmes is watching thoughtfully, Gabrielle and Watson are puzzled.
WATSON
Sulphuric acid?
GABRIELLE
The more we find out the less sense it makes.
HOLMES
To a graduate chemist it makes a great deal of sense. Sulphuric acid, when exposed to salt-water, produces chlorine gas.
(a beat)
Would you mind clasping your hands, Watson?
WATSON
(obeying)
Like this?
HOLMES
A little lower... Thank you.
Watson has lowered his clasped hands, and Holmes uses them as a foothold to go scrambling up the scaffolding of the nearby wall. Reaching the top, he looks off in the direction of the tower.
The workman carrying the canary cage, and the two carrying the crate of sulphuric acid are approaching the tower. A draw-bridge comes down, and the three men cross the moat and enter the tower.
HOLMES
(looking off)
That tower may be more interesting than I thought -- and not just architecturally.
Out of the ruined gatehouse comes the guard with the two mastiffs on leashes. The dogs start to snarl viciously.
WATSON
Holmes, I have a feeling we're redundant here.
.
Holmes leaps down from the scaffolding, wheels the tandem around, starts back in the direction from which they came. Gabrielle follows. Watson hurries after them with his bicycle, casting anxious glances over his shoulder as the dogs continue barking.
DISSOLVE TO:

→ Answer sheet: Pair 10

Pair 11/25 · HE-dfb1e02458b2

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 5

Version A

64 EXT. CALEDONIAN HOTEL - NIGHT

A gig is waiting in front of the entrance, and leaning against it is the guide we saw earlier at Urquhart.
Holmes comes out, carrying the champagne bottle.
HOLMES
Who's minding the castle?
GUIDE
You'd better get on. It's late.
Holmes climbs into the gig, and the guide moutns the seat beside him.
HOLMES
Where are we going? Some sort of party?
GUIDE
You won't be disappointed in the guest list.
.
HOLMES
Who's the host?
GUIDE
Jonah.
He flicks the reins. The horse starts off at a trot, and the gig turns into the driveway.

Version B

64 EXT. CALEDONIAN HOTEL - NIGHT

A gig waits, its driver fidgeting, checking his pocket watch. Leaning against the vehicle is the guide from Urquhart, impatiently tapping his foot. Holmes emerges, hefting a bottle of champagne with a flourish. He pauses, surveying the scene.
HOLMES
Who's keeping an eye on the castle?
GUIDE
(Without looking up)
You're already behind schedule. Best be moving.
Holmes throws a quick glance around, then clambers into the gig. The guide springs up beside him, adjusting his cap.
HOLMES
And where exactly are we headed? A clandestine gathering, perhaps?
GUIDE
(A sly smile plays on his lips)
You'll find the company... stimulating.
Holmes raises an eyebrow, intrigued.
HOLMES
And the host?
GUIDE
Jonah.
With a sharp crack of the whip, the horse bolts forward, the gig careening into the long, winding driveway. Gravel spatters as they gain speed.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 11

Pair 12/25 · HE-cfb4d616ddee

Dog Day Afternoon · scene position 5

Version A

23 INT. HEIDI'S APARTMENT - DAY

The apartment is a whirlwind of mismatched furniture and children's toys. Glasses sit unwashed on tables, and a general sense of disarray prevails. Neighbors pop in and out without knocking, drawn by the commotion. Two officers stand awkwardly near the doorway, struggling to be heard over the din.

HEIDI
(Her voice trembling slightly)
It's just... things are piling up, you know? How he's been acting, the people he's been with. I look at him, and he's snapping at the kids, yelling like he's lost it. I remember one time, in the car, I said, 'Sonny, what are you going to do with that gun? Are you going to shoot me?' I was terrified, truly terrified. I've never been that scared of him before.

Her neighbor, MARTHA, leans in, offering a comforting hand on Heidi’s arm.

MARTHA
He’s been different lately, hasn’t he?

HEIDI
(Nodding, tears welling up)
His mother always said the police were always at our house, always fighting. We had our moments, sure. I even hit him with a jack once, in the car! Missed and hit my own leg, though. It was a sight. He’d just put on his coat and disappear.

COP
Ma’am, you saw him. You saw the gun.

HEIDI
(Looking down, a flicker of doubt in her eyes)
He might have done it. His… his impulses, maybe. But not him. Not really.

Version B

23 INT. HEIDI'S APARTMENT - DAY

Chaos out of cut-rate furniture stores. Full of unwashed glasses, kids' clutter. Throughout, the children rush around unchecked. Neighbors enter without ceremony and listen.

The Cops stand, trying vainly to communicate... As they enter...

HEIDI
(continuing)
And things are adding in my head, how crazy he's been acting, and in with a bad crowd, an' I look at him, he's yellin' at the kids like a madman. So inna car I said to him, Sonny, what you gonna do with the gun? You gonna shoot me and dump my body inna river or what? I was so scared of him, I never been scared of Sonny never. You know, his mother says the cops was always at our house, we was always fighting. I hit him with the jack in the car once, but I only missed and hit myself, you should of seen my leg. And all he would ever do is put on his coat and go out. So they say it's Sonny but I don't believe it.

COP
Lady, you saw him. You saw his gun.

HEIDI
He might of done it, his body functions might of done it, but not he himself.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 12

Pair 13/25 · HE-45f75a06719e

Dog Day Afternoon · scene position 3

Version A

21 EXT. HEIDI'S APARTMENT HOUSE - DAY

A working class block, dirty, shops in the first floor, three story walk-ups above... Heidi appears and runs up the stoop. TWO COPS get out of a squad car where they've been staked out and move up to her. They never really get in a word edgewise. They follow her into the hall... Now as we CUT CLOSER to her, we will SEE Heidi's mouth in SYNC with the words...

HEIDI
So night before last we're at Coney Island, he's on the rides with the kids, an' I have this habit of goin' in glove compartments an' all, an' I see...

Version B

21 EXT. HEIDI'S APARTMENT HOUSE - DAY

A working class block, slightly rundown but with a lived-in feel. Small shops occupy the ground floor, with three-story walk-ups above. Heidi emerges, a nervous energy about her, and hurries up the stoop. Two COPS, MILLER and DAVIS, step out of a parked squad car – they've been patiently waiting. Miller approaches Heidi, his tone conversational.

MILLER
(Friendly, but firm)
Heidi, just a few questions. You mentioned seeing something important. Can you tell us about it?

Heidi hesitates, glancing around before responding.

HEIDI
(Quickly, almost breathless)
It happened at Coney Island, night before last. He was on the rides with the kids... I have this habit of checking glove compartments, you know… and I saw…

→ Answer sheet: Pair 13

Pair 14/25 · HE-d808d83c99a2

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 4

Version A

63 INT. HOTEL ROOM - NIGHT

Holmes, in a different suit of clothes, stands by the French window, gazing out toward the lake. Gabrielle is propped up in bed, a blanket drawn up to her chin, watching him. Watson, who has changed into a pair of trousers, is standing near the fireplace.
Gabrielle glances at Watson, a faint smile playing on her lips.
WATSON
Yes, I know. It’s rather drafty in here.
Holmes continues to observe the lake. Watson becomes aware of Holmes’ quiet contemplation.
WATSON
Is something troubling you, Holmes?
Holmes remains silent, his gaze fixed on the water.
WATSON
Whenever you fall silent like this, I know you’re piecing things together.
HOLMES
It’s a familiar pattern, Watson. We’ve encountered similar circumstances before.
WATSON
Indeed? Where?
HOLMES
At the ballet.
WATSON
Ballet?
.
HOLMES
There's a lake -- and there's a castle -- and there's a swan that isn't really a swan - or, in this case, a monster that isn't really a monster.
WATSON
Then what is it?
HOLMES
What is it indeed that feeds on canary birds and sulphuric acid, and has an engine for a heart?
GABRIELLE
A mechanical device?
HOLMES
The stethoscope is a sensitive instrument, and water is an excellent conductor of sound. I am confident we are dealing with a mechanical creation.
WATSON
But why would anyone construct such a thing?
Holmes turns from the window, his expression grave.
HOLMES
Not for mere amusement, I suspect.
.
GABRIELLE
Why were they so determined to prevent me from finding my husband? And why was he buried anonymously?
HOLMES
I believe I am beginning to understand their motives – the Society for the Preservation of Scottish Monuments – better known as the Diogenes Club.
WATSON
The Diogenes Club?
There is a knock on the door.
HOLMES
Come in.
The door opens and the hotel manager enters, holding a bottle of champagne.
MANAGER
Mr. Ashdown, I have a bottle of champagne for you.
HOLMES
(crossing to him)
A bottle of champagne? I did not request it.
MANAGER
No, sir. You are to deliver it.

These are my instructions.
He hands the bottle to Holmes.
HOLMES
Instructions from whom? Deliver it where?
MANAGER
I wouldn't know, sir. But there's a carriage waiting for you downstairs.
HOLMES
Are you certain you have the correct Mr. Ashdown?
.
MANAGER
(flatly)
Quite certain, Mr. Holmes.
He turns and exits. Holmes examines the bottle thoughtfully.
HOLMES
Well, Watson, it appears the final scene is about to begin.
WATSON
I have a feeling this won’t be pleasant.
GABRIELLE
Please be careful.
Holmes moves toward the door. Watson reaches into his pocket.
WATSON
You might want this.
He produces a small, silver whistle, holds it out to Holmes. Holmes nods, exits.

Version B

63 INT. HOTEL ROOM - NIGHT

Holmes, in a different suit of clothes, is pacing across the room, whistling the main theme from "Swan Lake." He stops before the open French window, gazes out toward the lake. Gabrielle is propped up in bed, a blanket drawn up to her chin, watching him. Watson, who has changed into a pair of kilts, is standing in front of the fireplace, warming his backside.
Gabrielle glances at Watson, suppresses a giggle.
WATSON
Yes, I know. But would you believe that you can't borrow a decent pair of trousers in this place?
Holmes resumes pacing, and Watson becomes aware of his whistling.
WATSON
Would you like to confide in us?
No answer from Holmes. Watson turns to Gabrielle.
WATSON
Whenever he starts whistling, I know he's getting close to a solution.
HOLMES
It's nothing new, actually. We've come across this situation before.
WATSON
We have? Where?
HOLMES
At the ballet.
WATSON
Ballet?
.
HOLMES
There's a lake -- and there's a castle -and there's a swan that isn't really a swan -- or, in this case, a monster that isn't really a monster -WATSON
Then what is it?
HOLMES
What is it indeed that feeds on canary birds and sulphuric acid, and has an engine for a heart?
GABRIELLE
An engine?
HOLMES
The stethoscope is a very sensitive instrument, and water is an excellent conductor of sound. There is no doubt that what we are dealing with is a mechanical monster.

WATSON
Oh?
HOLMES
Not only is it equipped with an artificial heart, it also has artificial lungs. Judging from the bubbles on the surface of the lake, it uses some form of air pump.
GABRIELLE
You think my husband was involved in all this?
HOLMES
Yes, Madame Valladon. I'm sure of it.
WATSON
But why would anybody build a mechanical monster? Just to scare people?
HOLMES
Not very likely.
.
GABRIELLE
Why did they try to keep me from finding my husband? And why was he buried anonymously?
HOLMES
I think I have a pretty good notion of what they're up to -- the Society for the Preservation of Scottish Monuments -better known as the Diogenes Club.
WATSON
The Diogenes Club?
There is a knock on the door.
HOLMES
Come in.
The door opens and the hotel manager enters, holding a magnum of champagne.
MANAGER
Mr. Ashdown, I have a bottle of champagne for you.
HOLMES
(crossing to him)
A bottle of champagne? I didn't order it.
MANAGER
No, indeed. You are to deliver it.
These are my instructions.
He hands the magnum to Holmes.
HOLMES
Instructions from whom? Deliver it where?
MANAGER
I wouldn't know, sir. But there's a carriage waiting for you downstairs.
HOLMES
Are you sure you have the right Mr.
Ashdown?
.
MANAGER
(flatly)
Quite sure, Mr. Holmes.
He turns and exits. Holmes taps the bottle of champagne thoughtfully.
HOLMES
Well, Watson, I would say the curtain is going up on the last act.
WATSON
I don't like the sound of it.
GABRIELLE
Please be careful.

As Holmes starts toward the door, Watson reaches into his sporran.
WATSON
You'd better take this with you.
He produces a revolver, holds it out to Holmes. Holmes ignores it, exits.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 14

Pair 15/25 · HE-9191e879a72c

Ghostbusters II · scene position 10

Version A

38 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - CONTINUOUS ACTION

Venkman peers into the hole, shielding his eyes. "What was that?!"
Spengler adjusts his glasses, scanning the area with a proton pack.
"Energy signature spike. Significant."
The cops exchange nervous glances. The supervisor chews on his cigar.
Suddenly, a bright FLASH erupts from the hole, followed by Stantz's SHOUT.
STANTZ (O.S.)
I think we just woke something up!
Venkman leans further in. "Woke what, Stantz? A grumpy ghost?
Another FLASH, brighter this time. Stantz's voice, strained.
STANTZ (O.S.)
Maybe more than one!
The supervisor coughs, dropping his cigar. "Alright, men, let's maintain a perimeter! And somebody call for backup!"
Spengler nods grimly. "I'm detecting increased ectoplasmic activity.
This is escalating quickly."

Version B

38 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - CONTINUOUS ACTION

Venkman, Spengler, the cops and the supervisor all react to a bright FLASH deep down in the hole and a SHOUT from Stantz.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 15

Pair 16/25 · HE-bd46080d8e11

Ghostbusters II · scene position 8

Version A

36 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - SAME TIME

Stantz hangs suspended, peering down into the shaft where slime bubbles upward. He kicks desperately, dislodging a section of rusted conduit. A brief, panicked look crosses his face as he struggles.

Version B

36 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - SAME TIME

Stantz is hanging there, looking down into the shaft at the slime which is now bubbling up the shaft after him.
STANTZ
(shouting)
Get me out of here!!
Desperate now, he kicks wildly and knocks loose a section of an old, rusting conduit.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 16

Pair 17/25 · HE-8e73e219fbb9

Dog Day Afternoon · scene position 2

Version A

20 EXT. BROOKLYN STREET - DAY

Out of a subway crowd, she struggles, pulling the two kids by the hand, a very ordinary woman in a most ordinary New York scene...
HEIDI (V.O.)
...Only he tells me this and he tells me that, he's with the Mafia, I say,
Sonny, where do you get the money, you're on welfare, how can you rent a new Eldorado, red, you don't like the color you rent a yellow.

Version B

20 EXT. BROOKLYN STREET - DAY

Out of a bustling subway crowd, Heidi emerges, tugging two children by the hand. She’s a woman trying to blend in, amidst the everyday chaos of a Brooklyn street.
HEIDI (V.O.)
He insists he’s got it all figured out, tells me stories… claims he’s connected.
Suddenly, a man, SAL, approaches, a knowing smirk on his face.
SAL
(Teasing)
Still driving that canary yellow, Heidi? You’ve got a flair for the dramatic.
Heidi shoots him a weary look, but a flicker of amusement crosses her face.
HEIDI
(Dryly)
It was on sale, Sal. Don’t tell Sonny I said that. He’d have my head.
SAL
(Chuckles)
Sonny’s got bigger things to worry about. Welfare checks aren’t exactly funding his empire.
Heidi glances around, then leans in, lowering her voice.
HEIDI
So, where does he get the money, Sal? Seriously. It’s a mystery.
Sal shrugs, a playful glint in his eyes.
SAL
Some things are better left a mystery, Heidi. Especially when you’re standing this close to a certain someone’s ears.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 17

Pair 18/25 · HE-15dab9f7ed68

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 1

Version A

60 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - DAY

On a promontory jutting into Loch Ness stand the weathered remains of a medieval fortress.
Scaffolding clings to the Tower, the Motte, and the crumbling East wall, where a team of roughly twenty men are diligently engaged in restoration work. Within the rubble of the Nether Bailey, a small encampment of tents has been established. Holmes, Gabrielle, and Watson arrive on bicycles, stopping before the imposing locked gates. A sign is affixed to the gatepost: WARNING: No Unauthorized Person Permitted Beyond This Point.
WATSON
Well, I don’t think we have to bother with this castle. It’s just a pile of rubble.
GABRIELLE
Then why are they taking precautions?
She gestures towards the sign and then to a stern-faced guard approaching along the driveway, accompanied by two large, powerful mastiffs straining at their leashes.
HOLMES
Why, indeed?
(turning the tandem around)
Let's go.
WATSON
Go where?
HOLMES
When rebuffed at the front door, one's only choice is to try the tradesmen’s entrance.
.
They cycle away.

Version B

60 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - DAY

On a promontory jutting into Loch Ness stand the remains of a medieval fortress. Around the Tower, the Motte, and the ruins of the East wall, wooden scaffolding has been erected, and a couple of dozen men are engaged in what appears to be repair work. Amidst the rubble of the Nether Bailey, an encampment of tents has been set up. Holmes, Gabrielle and Watson come bicycling up along a fence on the heights overlooking the castle, dismount in front of the locked gates. Attached to the gatepost is a sign reading: WARNING: No Unauthorized Person Permitted Beyond This Point.
WATSON
Well, I don't think we have to bother with this castle. It's just a pile of rubble.
GABRIELLE
Then why are they taking precautions?
She points to the sign -- and to a guard coming up the driveway, with a couple of huge mastiffs on leashes.
HOLMES
Why, indeed?
(turning the tandem around)
Let's go.
WATSON
Go where?
HOLMES
When rebuffed at the front door, one's only choice is to try the tradesmen's entrance.
.
They move off.

DISSOLVE TO:

→ Answer sheet: Pair 18

Pair 19/25 · HE-9ebbf47e657d

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 3

Version A

62 EXT. LOCH NESS - EARLY EVENING

The sun has just gone down behind the hills, but there is still light in the sky. An ominous mist is beginning to settle on the water.

Gabrielle is sitting in the stern of a rowboat, her parasol in her lap. She is wearing Holmes' Norfolk jacket over her dress to ward off the chill.

On the rowing seat, facing her, are Watson and Holmes, the latter in his waistcoat. Their oars are pulled in, and they are watching Urquhart Castle, on the opposite side of the lake.

WATSON
We have now observed the castle from the front, from the back, from the side, from land, from water... what now? Are you planning to spend the night out here?

HOLMES
If necessary.

WATSON
You're going to catch your death of cold.
(to Gabrielle)
Wouldn't it be ironic if Holmes' last case were a case of pneumonia?
(with an embarrassed chuckle)
Sorry.

Gabrielle glances past them, and her eyes widen.

GABRIELLE
(pointing off)
What's that?

Holmes and Watson turn their heads.

.

About half a mile away, moving in and out of patches of drifting mist, is Watson's monster, its long reptillian neck cutting through the water.

Watson leaps to his feet.

WATSON
Holmes!

Holmes grabs his arm, pulls him back into his seat.

HOLMES
Quick, Watson. After it!

He grabs his oar, and Watson belatedly joins in. They strain at the oars, setting a course which will intercept the monster. Gabrielle leans forward in her seat, trying to peer past them through the curtains of mist.

The monster is much closer now -- no more than a quarter of a mile away.

Suddenly Watson stops rowing.

WATSON
Holmes, what are we doing? We should be going away from it.

HOLMES
Keep rowing, dammit!

Watson resumes pulling on his oar. As they row, Holmes looks over his shoulder.

The monster has started to submerge. Its head disappears beneath the surface of the water, and the wake it leaves behind soon trails off into the mist.

Holmes ships his oar.

HOLMES
We've lost it.

WATSON
(stops rowing)
At least you admit there's an it, not just a figment of my imagination.

HOLMES

Quiet.
.
He listens intently. There is only the sound of water slapping against the side of the boat. The mist is heavier now, and billowing around them.
HOLMES
(to Watson)
Do you have your stethoscope with you?
WATSON
Never without it.
He removes his bowler, unwinds the stethoscope from the inside the crown, hands it to Holmes. Holmes plugs in the ear-pieces, leans over the side of the boat, extends the other end of the stethoscope to the surface of the water.
WATSON
What is it?
HOLMES
I can hear something...
We become aware of the faint beating of engines, accompanied by a bubbling sound.
HOLMES
It's getting closer -- closer -Suddenly the surface of the water breaks, about twenty yards away from them, and the head and neck of the monster rear up from the depths. Watson is first to notice it and jumps to his feet, making choking noises. Gabrielle sees it and screams. Watson grabs an oar, throws it at the monster as it comes past. The backwash hits the boat broadside, rocking it, and Holmes, Watson and Gabrielle are spilled into the lake.
The monster moves away from them, heading in the general direction of the castle. It disappears into the mist.
Holmes is the first to come up, looks around, sees Gabrielle surfacing a few yards away, swims to her.
HOLMES
Are you all right?
GABRIELLE
I lost my parasol.
.
HOLMES
Where's Watson?
He glances around, sees Watson's bowler floating nearby, swims over to it.
HOLMES
Watson?
He lifts the hat -- but Watson isn't under it.
As Gabrielle hoists herself into the boat, Watson clambers over the other side. After a moment Holmes joins them, and they sit there, sopping wet and breathing heavily.
WATSON
I have come face to face with man-eating tigers -- I was once caught in a stampede of wild elephants -- India, you know -but I wasn't half as frightened. This beast seems to have a personal grudge against us.
GABRIELLE
I just hope it doesn't come back.
HOLMES
I don't think it will.
(pointing off)
Look!
They glance in the indicated direction.
There is no sign of the monster. But the mist has momentarily lifted to reveal the castle, and an odd sight greets their eyes -- the wooden scaffolding in front of the tower is slowly rising into the air.
WATSON
(amazed)
What strange goings-on.
HOLMES

Not really. My guess is that the monster, after a hard day's work, has returned home for his supper.
.
The scaffolding in front of the tower slowly descends back into the place, as mist once more engulfs the castle.
DISSOLVE TO:

Version B

62 EXT. LOCH NESS - EARLY EVENING

The sun has just gone down behind the hills, leaving a soft, diffused light over the water.
A gentle mist begins to settle, obscuring the far shore.
Gabrielle sits quietly in the stern of a rowboat, observing the landscape. She wears Holmes' Norfolk jacket, a subtle shield against the evening chill.
Watson and Holmes occupy the rowing seats, facing Urquhart Castle across the loch. Their oars rest still in the water.
WATSON
We've surveyed the castle from every angle. What's next, Holmes? A vigil?
HOLMES
Perhaps.
WATSON
You'll catch a chill.
(to Gabrielle)
It would be ironic, wouldn't it? Holmes felled by a Highland cold.
(He offers a small, apologetic smile.)
Gabrielle looks out over the water, a thoughtful expression on her face. She points towards the mist.
GABRIELLE
There… something.
Holmes and Watson turn, their eyes scanning the water. The mist swirls, concealing and revealing.
Holmes listens intently, his gaze fixed on a point in the distance. He doesn't react visibly.
WATSON
(after a moment)
Just the mist playing tricks.
HOLMES
(quietly)
Perhaps.
They remain silent, the only sound the gentle lapping of water against the boat. Holmes adjusts his position slightly, his eyes narrowed.
WATSON
(breaking the silence)
Do you think anyone truly believes in this… monster?
HOLMES
Belief is irrelevant, Watson. What matters is observation.
He pauses, then adds, almost to himself:
HOLMES
There's something… unusual about the water's surface there.
He gestures vaguely towards the mist. Watson follows his gaze, but sees nothing.
WATSON
I see nothing but mist, Holmes.
HOLMES Precisely.
He returns his gaze to the castle, a faint smile playing on his lips. The mist thickens, swallowing the distant shore.
DISSOLVE TO:

→ Answer sheet: Pair 19

Pair 20/25 · HE-84c122d8ccfe

Dog Day Afternoon · scene position 4

Version A

22 INT. HALL - DAY

Heidi slowly ascends the stairs, the children trailing behind. The police follow, a noticeable distance away.
HEIDI
(to herself, quietly)
This gun... bullets inside. Oh, God, Sonny. That's all I needed to see. I didn't say anything.
She reaches her unlocked door. Below, and on the stairs, neighbors cautiously watch from a distance.

Version B

22 INT. HALL - DAY

Heidi struggles up the stairs, dragging the kids -- the cops following...
HEIDI
this gun with bullets in there, an'
I go to myself, oh God, Sonny! That's all I had to see, I didn't say anything.
She's got her door unlocked. Below and on the stairs behind the Cops, curious neighbors peer in...

→ Answer sheet: Pair 20

Pair 21/25 · HE-ecfe7daba563

Ghostbusters II · scene position 6

Version A

34 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ - NIGHT

STANTZ
(ranting on the radio)
Oh, my God! It's a seething, bubbling, psychic cess! Interlocked tubes of plasm, crackling with negative GEVs! It's glowing and moving! It's -- it's a river of slime!!
STANTZ
He dangles from the end of the cable, holding his feet up as high as he can. He unhooks a device from his utility belt and pulls the trigger on it, shooting out a long telescoping fishing-pole with a scoop on the end.
Reaching down, he scoops up a sample of the slime and starts retracting the pole.
SLIME
Suddenly, a grotesque arm with a long skeletal fingers reaches up out of the slime and snatches at Stantz's dangling feet. He jerks his legs up as several more arms poke up out of the slime and reach for him.
STANTZ
(on the radio)
Haul me up, Venkman! Now!

Version B

34 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ - NIGHT

STANTZ
(Eyes wide, staring at the radio)
It's... incredible. A seething mass of energy. Tubes of plasma, crackling... glowing... moving.
Stantz dangles from the end of the cable, holding his feet up. He activates a device on his belt, extending a telescoping fishing-pole with a scoop. He lowers it into the slime, carefully collecting a sample, then begins retracting the pole.
Suddenly, a grotesque arm with skeletal fingers reaches up, snatching at Stantz's feet.
He
recoils, pulling his legs higher as more arms emerge from the slime, reaching for him.
Stantz looks down, a flicker of fear crossing his face. He grips the cable tighter.
STANTZ
(A strained shout)
Pull me up! Venkman!

→ Answer sheet: Pair 21

Pair 22/25 · HE-25063d128982

Ghostbusters II · scene position 12

Version A

40 INT. DANA BARRETT'S APARTMENT - NIGHT (SAME TIME)

She walks around in the dark lighting candles and placing them all over the living room. Then she finds a transistor radio and turns it on for information about the blackout. She listens to a special news report for a moment, then has a compelling impulse to go check on the baby. She crosses to the nursery carrying a candle and quietly opens the door and looks in. Suddenly the DOORBELL RINGS, scaring her half to death. Leaving the chain on the door, she opens it a crack and sees Janosz standing in the hall, eerily lit by a red emergency spot at the end of the hallway. He looks slightly dazed and even creepier.

DANA
(surprised) Janosz?

JANOSZ
Hello, Dana. I happened to be in the neighborhood and I thought I'd stop by to see if everything's all right with you -you know, with the blackout and everything? Are you okay? Is the baby all right?

His affected concern is chilling. She is frightened but conceals it from him.

DANA
(mechanically and cautiously)
We're fine, Janosz.

He tires to look around her into the apartment.

JANOSZ
Do you need anything? You want me to come in?

DANA
No, everything's fine. Honestly. Thanks anyway.

JANOSZ
Okay, just thought I'd check. Good night, Dana. Sleep well. Don't let the bedbugs bite you.

DANA
Good night, Janosz.

She closes the door behind him and double locks it, then stands there staring into the candlelight, alone and afraid.

Version B

40 INT. DANA BARRETT'S APARTMENT - NIGHT (SAME TIME)

She walks around in the dark, lighting candles and placing them strategically around the living room. She finds a transistor radio and switches it on, catching a news report about the blackout. "Anything new?" she mutters to herself, listening intently. She glances towards the nursery, a sudden worry crossing her face. "Gotta check on Oscar," she says aloud, grabbing a candle and heading towards the door. As she reaches the nursery door, the DOORBELL RINGS, startling her. She jumps, nearly dropping the candle. Leaving the chain on, she cautiously opens the door a crack. Janosz stands in the hallway, bathed in the unsettling glow of a red emergency light. He looks disoriented.

DANA
(Surprised)
Janosz? What are you doing here?

JANOSZ
(A little unsteady)
Dana, hello. I was… nearby. Just concerned, you know? With the blackout… everything. Are you alright? Is Oscar?

DANA
(Trying to sound calm)
We're fine, Janosz. Really.

JANOSZ
(Peering past her)
Everything seems… dark. Is there anything you need? Perhaps I could come in?
DANA (Firmly)
No, thank you. We're perfectly fine. Honestly.
JANOSZ
(Shrugs, a strange smile playing on his lips)
Just checking. A neighborly gesture. Good night, Dana. Pleasant dreams.
DANA
(A little too quickly)
Good night, Janosz.
She shuts the door with a decisive click and double-locks it, leaning against the door, her hand trembling slightly. She stares into the candlelight, a wave of unease washing over her. "What was that all about?" she whispers to herself.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 22

Pair 23/25 · HE-114c8c2a1a51

Ghostbusters II · scene position 2

Version A

30 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ'S POV - NIGHT

He is suspended near the top of a beautifully preserved chamber with rounded, polished tile walls ardorned with intricate, colorfully enameled Art Nouveau mosaics. A finely inlaid sign identifies it as VAN HORNE STATION.
STANTZ
He pans the walls with his flashlight, admiring the excellent tilework, and speaks quietly to Venkman and Spengler over his walkie-talkie.
STANTZ
(reverently)
This is it, boys, the end of the line. Van Horne Station. The old New York Pneumatic. It's still here.

Version B

30 INT. VAN HORNE STATION - STANTZ'S POV - NIGHT

He is suspended near the top of a beautifully preserved chamber with rounded, polished tile walls adorned with intricate, colorfully enameled Art Nouveau mosaics. A finely inlaid sign identifies it as VAN HORNE STATION.
STANTZ (V.O.)
This is it, boys. Van Horne Station. The old New York Pneumatic. Still here.
He pans the walls with his flashlight, a small smile playing on his lips. Venkman’s voice crackles over the walkie-talkie.
VENKMAN (O.S.)
Anything interesting up there, Stantz?
STANTZ
(reverently)
Just… incredible craftsmanship, Venkman. Look at these mosaics. They're remarkably well-preserved. It's like stepping back in time.
Spengler chimes in, his voice more measured.
SPENGLER (O.S.)
Any signs of unusual energy readings?
STANTZ
(pauses, scanning)
Nothing yet, Spengler. Just… a palpable sense of history. A feeling… of waiting.
He shines the flashlight on a particularly vibrant mosaic depicting a stylized bird.
STANTZ
(to himself)
Imagine the people who used this place. The letters, the packages… all rushing through the city.
VENKMAN (O.S.)
Don't get too sentimental on us, Stantz. We're here to work.
STANTZ
(chuckles)
Right. Work. Just appreciating the architecture for a moment.
He continues his scan, a growing sense of unease creeping into his voice.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 23

Pair 24/25 · HE-0700f39d9ae1

The Private Life of Sherlock Holmes · scene position 8

Version A

67 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - NIGHT

A workman is lighting a couple of torches attached to the ruined gatehouse when the gig comes through the archway. The guide reins up the horse in front of the steps leading to the inner courtyard -- which are now covered with a narrow red carpet.
The guide nods to Holmes, who dismounts, starts up the steps, examining the red carpet. As he reaches the top, he looks off.
The strip of red carpet runs across the courtyard, lit by torches planted in the ground. A couple of workmen are are unrolling the rest of the carpet toward the entrance of the tower.
As Holmes passes one of the tents, the flap opens and Mycroft steps out, dressed in his inevitable frock coat.
MYCROFT
Mr. Ashdown, I presume.
HOLMES
(turning)
The red runner, I presume.
.
(indicates carpet)
You shouldn't have gone to all this trouble just for me.
MYCROFT
It's not for you.
(calling into tent)
McKeller.
(to Holmes)
May I have the champagne, please?
HOLMES
(handing him bottle)
-- not a very good vintage, is it?
MYCROFT
Mediocre. But then again, it's not for drinking.
A black-suited MAN emerges from the ten, and Mycroft gives him the champagne.
MYCROFT
Tie it up, will you?
The man moves off toward the tower. Mycroft pulls back the flap of the tent.
MYCROFT
In here.
Holmes passes inside, Mycroft following.

Version B

67 EXT. URQUHART CASTLE - NIGHT

A workman quietly lights a torch attached to the ruined gatehouse as the gig approaches through the archway. The guide slows the horse before the steps leading to the courtyard, now covered with a narrow red carpet. Holmes dismounts and ascends the steps, his gaze thoughtful. The red carpet stretches across the courtyard, illuminated by torches.
Workmen are silently unrolling the rest of the carpet towards the tower entrance.
As Holmes passes a tent, it opens and Mycroft emerges, dressed in his frock coat.
MYCROFT
Mr. Ashdown, I presume.
HOLMES
(turning)
The red runner, I presume.
.
(indicates carpet)
You shouldn't have gone to all this trouble.

MYCROFT
It's not for you.
(calling into tent)
McKeller.
(to Holmes)
May I have the champagne, please?
HOLMES
(handing him bottle)
-- not a very good vintage, is it?
MYCROFT
Mediocre. But then again, it's not for drinking.
A man in black emerges from the tent, and Mycroft gestures for him to take the champagne.
MYCROFT
Secure it, please.
The man moves towards the tower. Mycroft gestures Holmes inside the tent.

→ Answer sheet: Pair 24

Pair 25/25 · HE-cc501e92c91a

Ghostbusters II · scene position 3

Version A

31 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Venkman stares into the hole, bewildered. Spengler approaches, gesturing towards the opening.
SPENGLER
The New York Pneumatic Railway. An experimental subway system. Fan-forced air-trains, built around 1870.
Stantz’s voice crackles over the walkie-talkie.
STANTZ (V.O.)
This is about as deep as you can go under Manhattan without digging your own hole.
Spengler looks at Stantz, a slight nod. He checks a device, then looks back at the hole.

Version B

31 EXT. EAST 77TH STREET - HOLE - NIGHT (CONTINUOUS ACTION)

Venkman has no idea what he's talking about.
SPENGLER
(explaining)
The New York Pneumatic Railway. It was an experimental subway system. Fan-forced air-trains, built around 1870.
STANTZ
(over the walkie-talkie)
This is about as deep as you can go under Manhattan without digging your own hole.
SPENGLER
(to Stantz)
What's the reading?

→ Answer sheet: Pair 25